Overview of Hip Replacement Surgery

Hip replacement surgery is a procedure to replace a damaged or worn-out hip joint with an artificial implant. It is commonly performed to relieve pain and restore mobility in patients suffering from arthritis, fractures, or other hip-related conditions that do not respond to non-surgical treatments.

Types of Hip Replacement Procedures

There are three main types of hip replacement procedures:

1. Total Hip Replacement (THR): Replaces both the ball and socket of the hip joint with artificial components.
2. Partial Hip Replacement: Only the femoral head (ball) is replaced, usually after a hip fracture.
3. Hip Resurfacing: The femoral head is capped with a metal covering instead of being replaced, often suitable for younger, active patients.
